

The PSNI responded to over 211,000 emergency response calls, province wide in the year January - December 2007. Prior to 2007 information is only available from our Belfast Control Room, which covers the greater Belfast area, where in 2006, police responded to over 6,000 emergency calls.

The number of collisions involving an emergency response, which include pursuits, have reduced and to date this appears to be the trend. We are committed to reducing the number of collisions and injuries received by civilians and police and with the introduction of response driving into the standard driving course, the increased percentage of the police fleet now liveried and the installation of incident data recorders into police vehicles, we will continue to improve this area of business.
