01 Foreword

A significant majority of violent offences committed against women and girls in Northern Ireland are perpetrated by men. Between 2019 and 2024, 30 women and girls across Northern Ireland were killed by men. Many more have faced other forms of male violence, abuse and intimidation, both within their own homes and the wider community.

As a police service, we remain collectively committed to providing a first class response to all violence, abuse and intimidation offences against women and girls in our local communities. Whilst these offences perpetrated against everyone and anyone in our society are completely unacceptable, the available evidence and lived experience of women and girls tells us that they are still disproportionately the victims at the hands of men. We want to continue to work in partnership to change this and pursue those responsible.

It is also important to still recognise that many women and girls from marginalised communities and people from LGBTQIA+ communities have and continue to face specific, unique risks to their safety and additional barriers to getting the support and care they need to report the harm they experience. This is a significant focus for us moving forward into year's three to seven of our action plan.

We know that policing only sees the tip of the iceberg and that there are women and girls out there who are still suffering in silence. My message through this action plan would be, please report to us. Have confidence in our ability to keep you and your family safe from harm. We want to help you and we want to see that justice is served to those who have hurt you in any way.

Over the last two years we have worked extremely hard at building relationships with key partners, bolstering our training and challenging our own thoughts and behaviours in this space. As a result of targeted resourcing and relentlessly pursuing perpetrators we have seen a reduction in VAWG offences and an increase in outcome rates for victims.

There is no doubt that we have made significant progress in our efforts but there is more work to be done. We are not complacent and as a learning organisation, we still have lessons to embed and take forward.

In years one and two of our action plan we have already completed 33 of the 41 actions we set for ourselves, an ambitious feat at the time but a challenge we rose to. Looking forward, we have carried forward the remaining actions and added 13 more to complete.

The structure of our action plan will now come under the national VAWG framework of a '4P' approach of PREPARE, PROTECT, PURSUE and PREVENT. This is a tested methodology that was developed in counter-terrorism and showcases how serious we take VAWG.

Our refreshed framework for years three to seven seeks to meet the national strategic policing requirement and focus activity on what we have learned and can be evidenced to protect women and girls: based on partner insight, commentary and the learning policing has gone through since we first published our action plan back in 2022.

Over the last two years we have worked extremely hard at building relationships with partners, bolstering training and challenging our thoughts and behaviours in this space. As a result of targeted resourcing and relentlessly pursuing perpetrators we have seen a reduction in VAWG offences and an increase in outcome rates.

Every officer and staff member remains committed but we can't win this fight and change the narrative on our own. I look forward to the anticipated publication of the Northern Ireland Executive Office's Ending Violence against Women and Girls strategy and the Department of Justice and Health's Domestic Abuse and Sexual Violence Strategy, both of which will run parallel to the lifespan of the remainder of this action plan and affirm a societal commitment.

We promised that years one and two were only the beginning of the journey. We know that women and girls want to see continued delivery through a visible, accessible and responsive Police Service that cares, listens and acts. cares, listens and acts.

The Police Service of Northern Ireland Violence Against Women and Girls Co-ordination Group will continue to meet frequently to drive progress against the objectives and actions in this plan. The group will have representation from varying ranks, grades and roles across our organisation and will include staff associations.

Progress will be reported to and overseen by the Service Performance Board to ensure achievement of the outcomes of this action plan. Updates will be provided on progress of the action plan to the Northern Ireland Policing Board at intervals agreed with them. We will regularly review our action plan and incorporate new actions as required.
